In this article, I am going to walk through steps and examples of how to answer the question interview "Tell me about you" to impress employers and get more job offers. We will also deal with expensive errors you need to avoid if you want to exceed this question. Here's exactly what you're about to get: The most recommended method of responding "Tells Me"4 examples of good answers for "Tell me about you"A shorter and more recent method for expert candidates How to practice your answer to ensure you are 100% ready for the interview Let's start... How to respond "Tell me about yourself" in an interview:1. Choose the right starting point for your story (IMPORTANT) Your goal when you answer, "Tell me about yourself", is to give a short and concise walk of your career history that will show relevant pieces of experience. You want to start at a point in the past (as you started working in this field), and end up at your current situation. So the first thing to decide is where to start the story... If you are a recent graduate: Start with the fact that you just graduated and explain why you chose this career path or field of study. For example, you might start your answer like this: "I graduated in Economics two months ago. I chose that field of study because I was always interested in finance and money, and a couple of family members told me that it leads to great career options, too. " If you have 1-8 years of experience, start with the moment you graduated and go through your work experience ever since. Here is an example of how to start your response interview in this situation: "I graduated with my degree in Industrial Engineering six years ago and went straight to work for a small design company in Chicago. Since then, I have..." And if you have 8-20 years of experience, you can start with an intermediate point in your career. This will keep your answer for too long. For example, if you are a manager, you might start with how you became a manager. If you have been working for 25 years, but have just been a sales professional for 12 years, you could start with how you started in sales. Here is an example of how to start your response to "tell me about yourself" as a very experienced candidate: "I started managing people twelve years ago when I was promoted by Customer Service Associate to Customer Service Supervisor. Since then, I...".2. Experience and impressive accessories As you tell your career story, explain the key results you have achieved, the work you have done, the skills you have learned, and the key career moves you have done. Have you been promoted? This is always a great sign and it is worth mentioning. You did something significant how to solve a big problem for yourEmployer? This is also nice to mention. Have you built new skills or overcome challenges? Get specs! Say it. Say it. Awesome random facts are not enough. You should think about how this ties with the company you are talking to. You should always research the company before you enter the interview. Study their job description in particular so you know which skills interest you the most. What does this particular job entail? Is there a lot of leadership? Talk about your leading experiences (no matter how small!), how it went, what you learned. Does the job involve a high level of technical skill? Talk about how you've learned and progressed in that area through every step of your career! You need to "code" your response to, "tell me about you", for their job description and their needs. Try talking about experiences and qualifications that are relevant to this job you have applied for.3. Conclude by explaining your current situation Finally, the best way to end your story is to get them to speed up your current situation. Because you wanted to ask their job, what you're trying to do next, etc. For example, you could end your answer by saying, "and that's why I wanted to interview your studio. This position seems like a great opportunity to advance those skills I just talked about, and keep building my career and challenging me".4. When employers ask, "tell me about you", in an interview, they usually want to hear about you as a professional. So the safest approach is to keep your job-related response and share your career story, rather than personal details. You may show more personalities as the interview goes on, but it is risky to share too much personal information when you reply, "tell me about yourself". It could lead to your response getting too long, or it could cause you to leave out important professional information that the interviewer was trying to know!5. Be concise when answering (2 minutes or less!) When they say "tell me about yourself", it will be difficult to give a long-term answer: It's such an open question. And we've covered a lot on it, but there's something just as important about it all. You have to be concise. Your communication and the ability to stay on track with your response is something they are watching closely. The interviewer wants to see that you can tell your story from Point A (initiative) to Point B (end) without getting trapped, distracted or scattered. Because it tells them how to communicate as an employee... when there's a problem, when there's a disagreement, or when it's enough to share your knowledge or opinion. If you take this response over 2 minutes you are shooting yourself in the foot. In fact, under 90 seconds is ideal. Practice at home with a timer! That's why I recommend choosing a starting point based on your experience (Step 1 above)... because if you have 25 years of experience and you start at the moment you graduated in college, your response will be too long." Tell me about yourself"Answers:Now that we've covered the key steps to answer, "Tell me about tea", let's take a look at some examples of complete answers to this interview question. Example Answer for experienced candidates: "I graduated in Business in 2010, and was offered an account management position by a telecommunications company I had interned with. I loved working with clients and managing and growing my accounts, but the industry we were in alone wasn't very attractive to me. After that, I stayed a whole year and learned a ton of how to build and manage accounts successfully and ended up becoming a top performer in my group before I left. I left the brand a year to pursue a very similar position within an industry I am much more enthusiastic about health. I've been in this healthcare boot space for 2 years with this company and I feel ready to take my career to the next level so that's why I'm currently looking for a new opportunity.â The first example showed you how to respond âme tell about yourselfâ for experienced job seekers (at least a few years of experience). Now let's give an example for entry-level job seekers and inexperienced job seekers. Example of an inexperienced answer: "I graduated in Engineering two months ago. I chose that field of study because I've always been interested in math and physics, and a couple of family members told me that it leads to great career options. One of my key findings during my academic career was speaking at a conference on the subject of designing energy-efficient windows, based on research I had done for one of my senior classes. This led to an internship I just wrapped up, so I'm actively looking for a full-time position now. âStand Out by âTailoringâ Your Response to the Company The end of your response interview is a great opportunity to customize your response to the company and the job you're interviewing. When talking about what you are trying to do next in your career, try to mention anything you see this company providing for your career (leadership, technical challenges, exposure to new areas, etc.) This shows them why you are enthusiastic about their work, which will help you get hired! (I'll explain more why this is true here). Before we move on to more tips and a HUGE error to avoid, here is another interview example answer for this question. Shortest Method for How to Answer "Tell Me About Yourself" (only for experienced candidates) The method I gave you above is the most standard way recruiters advise you to answer "tell Me About Yourself." That's how I've been training job seekers to answer this question for years. There's another way to respond, though... and it has some benefits. I'll explain. many experts have pointed out that if the interviewer wanted your career history, they could have looked at your resume or your linkedin, or asked a question like: "Can you walk me through your background"? so there is approach to answer, âme tells about tea, which skips the career story and cuts right to the search: Why you're awesome and why they should hire you! Let's take a look at 2 word-for-word models that accomplish this. After that, you'll have two tried and tested methods to answer, "tell me about tea" in interviews, and in the next section, I'll reveal how to decide which method is best for you. Example response if you are looking for work during employment: "Well, I am currently working at XYZ Company and I specialize in doing _____. The reason I asked for this job is because I saw _____ on the job description and I think I would be able to help you _____ and _____. One of my key results in my current role has been helping my employer job do _____, and I'm sure I can help your team get similar results here.â Example response pattern if unemployed: âIn my most recent position at XYZ Company, I specialized in doing _____. The reason I asked for this job is that I saw _____ on the job description and I think I would be able to help you _____ and _____. One of my key results in my last role for XYZ Company was helping you _____, and I'm sure I can help your team get similar results here. What method should you use for your response? If you have work experience, both of the options we have covered are very good, and it really depends on what you feel most comfortable with. Choose the one you like best. They are both great ways to answer the question, so don't stress on it! However, if you're entry-level and you don't have work experience... or internship, at least... then I'd go back to the top of this article and use the first, 5-step method to answer, âæostell me about yourself.â This second method we just covered is really best if you want to give a unique and concise answer and you have some relevant work experience to share in the interest. Sigh! Practice Your Answer Before the Interview As a final tip â make sure you go to practice everything you plan to say when the interviewer asks, "What can you tell me about yourself?" Nothing comes out perfect the first time, and you don't want to look nervous and stumble when they ask. So I suggest you grab a piece of paper and write down the key points you want to talk about in your answer. I like to write them in bullet format. Then, use the smartphone voice recorder app to record some practice responses and see how it sounds. Don't look at the notes as you give your answer. The idea is to try to remember what you want to talk about without reading the newspaper. So, check the AFTER paper to make sure you've covered it all. Keep practicing until you can give a smooth answer without forgetting anything important. Note: If you are having phone, you can use notes/release points to help guide you through your response. No one can see you on the phone, so take advantage! advantage! advantage! advantage!
