Many years from now barry miles pdf. Paul mccartney many years from now barry miles.

Rhys grew up in Bro Morgannwg and recently returned after living away. Now, he's out to explore parts of his hometown he's rarely ventured into. A Growing Community with a Short History/Home for Cardiff International Airport and the southernmost point of mainland Wales, Rhoose was a village built around three large farms that have existed for over 300 years. The village has grown substantially in the last century and is now the fastest growing village in the Glamorgan Valley. At Rhoose Point, cement works and quarries have been replaced by housing and wildlife as the area has had a renaissance since 1990. Rhoose is far enough from Barry and Cardiff to feel rural, especially with its poor transport links, but not too far to feel trapped. Some would say it's the perfect trap. Others would have argued "it's not much." When I think of Rhoose in 10 years of time, I see a village much more crowded than it is now. I moved to Aberystwyth in 2015 and, after returning in the new year, a lot had changed in that short period. First, social media brought people into the area along with the Facebook community pages. A space for communities coming together to promote local businesses and support each other, online groups are a positive and convenient way for different parts of the village to act as one. Route along the coast of Wales in the southernmost point of Wales. Secondly, there are new developments every shift. At Rhoose Point, 90 new homes have been erected south of the railway line, accompanied by the largest children's park and playground at Rhoose Point. The new development Golwg y Môr has 347 new homes with over 250 already occupied. The new spaces are great for the community and the small number of local businesses, however I think a more sustainable way of life can be considered with most new homes that do not use sustainable energy, such as solar panels. Finally, coastal erosion continues to be a persistent problem. Although they haven't been the main problems since 2011, where a landslide left 15 caravans in nearby Porthkerry Caravan Park climbing on the edges of the cliffs, it becomes more likely to happen again as every unpredictable season passes. Where the cows Once Grazed, the kids are ready to be As you drive to Rhoose Point surrounded by farmland and views of the Bristol Canal ahead of you, you can't help but wonder what will occupy these fields by 2030. 10 years ago, cows would have grazed in the fields and the area certainly felt more like a rural village surrounded by active farmland. The locals expected these fields to be invaded by diggers and new road signs for a decade, so despite Unfixed plans, when the inevitable expansion happens, I hope it will be very different from the developments we have seen in the last 5 years. With the nearby Cardiff International Airport of Wales installing a new Solar PV farm on the airport site, with over a quarter of the power used at the airport forProvided by these, it would be fantastic to see the village's current fields turned into solar farms within the next decade. At a minimum, the new expansion should see all new homes equipped with solar panels. The site of potential new homes, where cows were forced to graze. The entrance of the road to potential new homes? Cardiff Airport Energy Planwhen We propel a sustainable community My mind jumps instantly For energy efficiency, renewable energy and waste management, a community built on environmental sustainability. However, it is important to recognize that there is much more that needs to be addressed. Many coastal villages across Wales have an abundance of holiday homes that some news outlets have discussed recently are turning local communities into "Ghost Towns" for most of the year. We are fortunate that two trailer parks on both sides of the village attract visitors rather than holidays. These help stimulate the local economy and help local businesses thrive. As these sites continue to expand in the next decade, so I imagine the companies benefiting from them. Perhaps in 10 years we will see more than the current 3 bars in the area, and even have a more diverse range of shops. Also the need for a socially equal and different community with economic sustainability is also vital. The Vale of Glamorgan 2001 Census showed that only 2.2% of the county's population was Black, Asian and ethnic minority and by 2011, this number had increased to 3.3%.1 While it is important to remember this figure has probably increased again in the last decade, you are still quite unlikely to see people from the Bame community while wandering through the red spot. The Vale of the Equality and Diversity Regime of the Council of Glamourgan, "with access to improving the best relationship Opportunity, delivery of services and political outcomes that address equality and diversity - 2 is a fantastic beginning to recognize the need to diversify and bring together communities from different backgrounds. The new Strategic Equality Project of the 2020-2024 plan is another step forward in recognizing the Need for Equality and Diversity by the Vale Council of Glamorgan. By 2030, it would be brilliant to see a diverse community with families of different backgrounds, religions and histories living side by side where farmland was.In front of these trees, the Caravan Park was the site of the main coastal erosion.Coastal erosion and frequent storms Coastal erosion is at the forefront of the minds of many people in the point of rhoose. Almost 10 years from 40 feet of rock yielded in the way and 15 caravans were almost washed into the sea, the coastal heritage trail is forced to be moved more every year while the faces of the cliff continue to fall to the force of the sea. This has been recognized by the housing developments that guarantee "the new developments towards the East is held premete from the edge of the cliff" - "to be devasting to see the families at the foot of the Point forced to move because of rising sea levels and flooding.Porthkerry Birdge3.5 hectares of reconstructionThe Porthkerry Country Park on the outskirts of Rhoose is undergoing drastic changes. Perhaps you know the photos of the enormous 19th century viaduct overlooking the old golf course of Porthkerry. This 12-hole course was recently closed due to continuous flooding and is now at the beginning of a major reconstruction project. New walkways were built from recycled plastic, similar to those of the nearby Cosmeston Lakes.The plan to reintroduce the species that once lived here and create new habitats in the meadows and ponds means that Porthkerry Country Park will have a new purpose in 10 years. It will be an area to educate children about the importance of all aspects of wildlife, biodiversity and improving ecosystem resilience.Rhoose is a village full of promise but also of possible disasters. If things don't change quickly, we could see an entire part of the country expelled due to rising sea levels and coastal erosion.On the other hand, nature is beginning to flourish in the quarry, along the coastal trail and in nearby Porthkerry. Looking ahead to the next decade, if the Council's plans for diversity continue along the same path, we could see a more sustainable and diverse community able to live side by side with nature.1. The life of a real estate agent often includes many miles spent driving to and from properties and for reasons businesses. Real estate agents, especially full-time professional agents, often manage to accumulate impressive annual mileage averages. Real estate agents are state-approved sales professionals who generally work as Contractors for the supervision of real estate intermediaries, in the sense that they are actually self-employed. An important part of the work of any real estate agent is to meet potential and real customers in various locations. Furthermore, real estate agents spend time on the road that goes to and from relative stops, such as the offices of the mortgage mortgage lender and to the government offices that deal with real estate registers. Real estate agents generally have a constant advice of automotive transport. According to the last survey of the National Association of Realtors, its member agents guided by a collective 3.6 billion miles in 2011. Based on the median deduction of commercial vehicle expenses detected by its members, the NAR esteem its own Agents on average about 3,300 miles at the year for the business guide. The Legal Website Noro notes that real estate agents easily accumulate 20,000 miles or more in the annual guide business. Vehicle of a real estate agent is also a full-service mobile office of that agent. Because real estate agents are independent contractors, the Internal Revenue Service allows them to deduct many business expenses. As a real estate agent, you can deduct your vehicle mileage using a method of mileage or actual expenses on your vehicle. The rates allowed for mileage are subject to change, but for 2018, the IRS mileage deduction was 54.5 cents per mile for guided corporate miles. For example, if you have driven 25,000 business-related miles in that year, you would simply multiply 25,000 for 0.545 and request a tax deduction of $ 13.625. Supporting what actually spent on the related vehicle mileage companies and expenses, instead of only deducting the right mileage generally gives you more deduction. To deduct actual expenses related to the business vehicle instead of just mileage, it is necessary to maintain an actual record of every expense. Business-related vehicle mileage and other expenses are claimed on table C of your IRS module 1040 federal income statement. Most real estate agents hold a logbook or insert their daily business miles and other vehicle expenses in a software program. program.
