Is there a web browser on samsung smart tv

There are dozens of great web browsers available for Android, depending on the features you're looking for. Whether it's syncing with your desktop, or super-speedy browsing, or support for flash navigation, you have options galore—some of them popular, others not so much. This week we're going to look at five of the best Android browsers, based on your nominations. Earlier in the week, we asked you which Android browser you thought was the best. We tallied your nominations, and while there are plenty to choose from, we only have room for the top five. You already know which web browser we think is best for Android, but just because we like it...Read moreThe poll is closed and the votes are counted! To see which of your picks took the top spot, head over to our weekly hive five followup post to read and discuss the winner! There are dozens of great web browsers for Android, each offering a unique blend of features that...Read moreFirefoxFirefox for Android has come a long way since its days in beta. It's fast, it's free, it fully supports Firefox Sync, so if you use Firefox on the desktop, it'll bring in your bookmarks and passwords. It's the first mobile browser to truly support Do Not Track, and the "Awesome Page" start screen that shows you all of your recently visited tabs helps you get right back to what you were doing if you had to put your phone down. It even supports add-ons and Personas, although there aren't too many of them yet. A few more options, and Firefox would be a good contender for our favorite, but it's clearly already one of yours, and for good reason. Android: The last time we mentioned Firefox for Android, its best features were still in beta. Its Read moreChromeChrome for Android finally left beta late last month, which means now it can go on to be the new "stock" browser on Android devices...assuming you're running Android 4.0 Ice Cream Sandwich or higher. If you are running ICS or Jelly Bean on your device, Chrome for Android is a must-download. It supports Incognito Mode browsing, bookmark syncing via Chrome Sync, and in its most recent updates, now supports search syncing, tab syncing, and more—anything that Chrome can sync on your desktop will be right there waiting for you on your Android device. Chrome for Android is also optimized for mobile, meaning it's blazing fast. The only downside is that Google hasn't made it available for phones running Gingerbread or tablets stuck with Honeycomb.Android: There's nothing major to announce in the latest version of Google's official Chrome...Read moreDolphin Browser HD/MiniDolphin Browser is our favorite web browser for Android, and for good reason. Dolphin's options and tools are unparalleled, even when compared to the big name browsers, supports dozens of third-party plug-ins and tools to extend its features, has built-in speech-to-text thanks to Dolphin Sonar, supports on-screen gestures to open bookmarks and navigate around pages, and comes in two flavors: the "HD" version for phones that can handle all of its features, and a "Mini" version for device owners who want speed and snappy performance over options. Even if you gravitate to one of the big names, Dolphin is worth at least trying.There's no shortage of great web browsers for Android, and which one you use is largely up to...Read moreBoat Browser/MiniBack in the early days of Android, one of the first browsers to challenge the stock browser was a now-vanished app called Miren. Miren was a great and feature-rich browser, but for reasons unknown, it's tough to find these days. If you liked Miren, Boat Browser is its spiritual successor. Fast, lightweight, and completely free. Boat is intuitive, supports add-ons, and has a powerful voice control engine (so you can say "Facebook" and the browser will bring up Facebook for you). You can even skin and theme the UI if you like, customize the speed dial start page with your favorite sites, and more. If your phone can't handle the full version—or you just want a lighter app (which is hard to believe), Boat Mini is there for you.Opera Mobile/MiniIf you're a fan of Opera on the desktop, Opera Mobile will suit you perfectly. Opera Mobile supports Opera Link, so you can sync your bookmarks, speed dial, and other user preferences with your desktop Opera install. Aside from that, Opera Mobile is fast, free, and goes out of its way to compress data in the background so you can browse your favorite sites without blowing past your wireless carrier's data caps. Opera even has its own mini-app store, full of third party add-ons that improve the browser or games that make it more fun to use. Have an older device? Opera Mini might be a better choice—you get most of the features, but even more speed.There you have it: your picks for the five best web browsers available for Android. Now it's time to decide which one is the best overall.This week's honorable mention goes out to the stock Android browser: the one that ships on most phones pre-Ice Cream Sandwich. It varies from OEM to OEM, but many of you said that you just didn't need to download another browser, and the one that came with your phone is good enough for you. That's fair, but we're looking at alternatives here!Have something to say about one of the contenders? Want to make the case for your personal favorite, even if it wasn't included in the list? Remember, the top five are based on your most popular nominations from the call for contenders thread from earlier in the week. Make your case for your favorite—or alternative—in the discussions below.The Hive Five is based on reader nominations. As with most Hive Five posts, if your favorite was left out, it's not because we hate it—it's because it didn't get the nominations required in the call for contenders post to make the top five. We understand it's a bit of a popularity contest, but if you have a favorite, we want to hear about it. Have a suggestion for the Hive Five? Send us an email at tips+hivefive@lifehacker.com! Windows/Mac: Kylo is a Mozilla-based web browser optimized for surfing the web on your HDTV from the comfort of your couch. Check out our screenshot tour to see it in all its 10-foot display glory.Kylo was designed to complement the nifty gyroscopic mouse —produced by Kylo's parent company—called The Loop. While The Loop is pretty sweet and we certainly wouldn't mind field testing one, for our testing we just used a regular old wireless keyboard and mouse hooked up to our HTPC. Kylo shines without any fancy peripherals, although it's certainly a great ambassador for The Loop.Kylo is optimized to be easy on your eyes and to make browsing the web from your couch as comfortable as possible. The address and toolbar are located on the bottom of the screen—looking down repeatedly towards the bottom of the screen is more eye-friendly than looking up to the top of the screen, it's also a better spot for good contrast if the TV is mounted too high.) They tailored everything from the buttons to the visual bookmarks for fumble-free clicking when the screen is far away.We took both screenshots and actual photographs of Kylo in action. The photograph at the top of this article is of Kylo as viewed from a spot on the couch dead center to the television and approximately 13 feet away. Our tireless office helper Spawn volunteered to sit in for a sense of scale. The photographs of Kylo and Firefox—seen below—were taken from standing height approximately 18 feet away from the screen. We grabbed screenshots of same screens we photographed for those of you that wanted a clearer picture of the interface.Kylo is a free offering from Hillcrest Labs, the company behind The Loop. The Loop is not required to use Kylo but an input device of some sort is—Kylo sports an on-screen qwerty keyboard, it's possible to go mouse-only. The only complaint, in fact, we can log against Kylo has nothing to do with Kylo itself—the jerks at Hulu decided to block Kylo the day Kylo publicly launched their browser. It was disappointing to load up Hulu only to have all the videos blocked. That said there are plenty of fish in the media sea and you can take your eyes elsewhere.Have experience Kylo or The Loop? Let's hear about it in the comments. Can't quite let go of Firefox for your couch-based browsing? Check out how to set up a 10-foot display in Firefox so you can keep your add-ons and other tweaks. Kylo is freeware, Windows and Mac only. It can take a place as the heart of your smart home, as long as you know how to use it. We're here to give you some tips on how to get started. Here are our picks for the best Samsung smart TV apps to download. See also: 10 best TV apps and live TV apps for AndroidSamsung doesn't rely on WebOS or Android TV to make things happen — instead, it takes matters into its own hands with Tizen OS. That means you won't find all of the same options as you would on some other smart TVs. We've tried to cover a full range of abilities with our list, but there are new apps almost daily. Ready to start downloading? The best Samsung smart TV apps: Samsung TV PlusIn a world where just about everything comes with a monthly fee, Samsung TV Plus is a great free alternative. This Samsung smart TV app grants a unique, geographically based mix of content for you to sink your teeth into at no cost. United States users are the best off, with over 100 channels to choose from, and there are more than 500 total channels worldwide. Have we mentioned that it's completely free? HBO MaxThis is more of a catch-all recommendation to download your favorite video streaming apps, but Samsung smart TVs are some of the few that supports a native HBO Max app. If you haven't moved to HBO Max, you can also tap into other services like Netflix, Hulu, and Apple TV. Your costs will vary — HBO Max is particularly expensive — but it's great to have all of your content in one convenient place. See also: What is HBO Max? Everything you need to know PlexPrice: Free / Plex Pass for $4.99 per monthPlex is less of a single app and more of a way to amass your own media fortress. You can stream more than 100 TV channels at no cost, enjoy free movies, and store all of your purchased content in one safe location. Plex is essentially an easy way to cut the cord from your cable box, but you can grab a Plex Pass for premium features at just $4.99 per month. The Plex Pass grants the ability to skip TV intros, enjoy higher-quality streaming, and more for far less than the price of cable. Price: Free / Spotify Premium variesA solid music streaming service is just as important as a video service, and Spotify is just one of many apps you can grab for your Samsung smart TV. You can also opt for Pandora or Apple Music, depending on your music service of choice. Overall, the TV apps function much like the mobile versions, just cranked up to fit onto your television. If you don't want to download the app itself, you can always stream from your phone directly to your TV with SmartThings. See also: What is Spotify? Here's everything you need to know AccuWeatherYou can always use your Samsung smart TV to check the weather channel, but handy apps like AccuWeather are just as important. AccuWeather offers free forecasts, access to radar, and severe weather alerts for free if you live in a large city. If you find yourself in a more rural area, you'll have to pay a small fee for full access. You can also save multiple locations and easily check the weather before heading out for a long vacation. AccuWeather is available in 12 languages. Steam Link allows you to do just that, and it doesn't cost a dime. Of course, your games aren't free, but you probably already have a few favorite titles in your library. Steam Link supports Xbox, PlayStation, and Steam controllers to make things easy. Unfortunately, Sony discontinued its PlayStation Now feature, so Steam is your best bet for console-free gaming on your TV. Sometimes your best bet is to pretend that Blockbuster is still around and go for a rental. Vudu is one of the best ways to manage your rentals, and you can do it right from the Samsung smart TV app. However, you'll want to keep an eye on your rentals because you can rack up a decently large bill fairly quickly. You won't have to pay for everything, though, as Vudu does offer a few free TV series and movies with ads. See also: Free Vudu movies: Here are the best ones to check out Echelon FitPassPrice: $79.99 plus a monthly subscriptionIn a world where many gyms are closed, and we're mostly working out from home, Echelon can be a lifesaver. It makes plenty of in-home fitness equipment, but we're mainly focused on FitPass. Echelon's FitPass essentially provides premium access to tons of classes and diverse workouts. Workouts vary between 10 and 45 minutes, and you'll need some of your own equipment, but the $79.99 base price helps to cover your streaming device as well as a heart rate monitor. See also: 10 best workout apps for Android Samsung SmartThingsOne more must-have Samsung smart TV app is probably already downloaded. Samsung SmartThings is your key to a smart home, and it's the easiest way to control your connected devices. It's generally meant to work with Samsung's own smart home devices, but you can also link up with gadgets from Ring, Ecobee, Arlo, and more. The app itself is free like most of Samsung's first-party apps, so get out there and give your smart home a boost. See also: The best Samsung SmartThings devices Tubi TVAnother app you need for your new Samsung smart TV is called Tubi TV. It's a completely free way to tap into movies and TV shows, even if there are a few ads. The important thing is that you'll never have to pay a dime. Not all movies are worth writing home about, but exciting titles like The Pursuit of Happiness and Gravity make Tubi TV worth the price of admission. TED! It's never too late to learn, right? The TED app is a great way to tap into curated talks by some of the smartest people. It's a completely free experience, and you can even dive into playlists of some of the best TED talks of all time. You never really know what you'll find on the TED app, as there are currently more than 3,600 videos from the likes of David Blaine, Bill Gates, and more.
