[132] [133] Ignatius proponents of this view include radicals such as Grotius [12] Thomas Paine [12] [134] Spencer and Herbert. It can not be reduced to socialism, and it is better seen as a separate and distinct doctrine. "[177] Geolibertarianism is a political movement and ideology that synthesizes libertarianism and geoist theory, traditionally known as Georgismo. [178] [179] Geolibertians usually advocate the distribution of land income to the community through a land value tax as proposed by Henry George and others before him. For this reason, they are frequently called individual tersers. Fred E. Foldvary Geo-libertarianism in an article with this title on earth and freedom. In the modern period, Murray Bookchin and the Institute of Social Ecology elaborated these ideas more systematically.
