While the device is largely exceptional *, it is simply a modified version of the htc one xl that is directed at at & t there is a particular feature that stands out: hd voice. for the first time in several years, voice calls are getting an update, but what is the voice hd and what does it offer? the voice hd is a term of umbrella that refers to technologies that improve the quality of an audio call, or the audio part of a video call, depending on the call system that is being used, the voice hd may or may not be available. most people experience the hd voice, when you hear voip platforms like skype on so computers. However, most people do not consider skype a hd voice platform because it is not a phone system. with the transition to predominantly digital cellular/satellite communications, unlike the traditional terrestrial circuit switching network, hd voice became possible for telephony. even better, governments around the world are now considering replacing traditional circuit switching telephone networks (potes) with voip networks switched on the fiber optic package. for cellular networks (and possibly hybrid cellular/satellite) hd voice has been developing since 2000. in the last two years, thefor hd voice on CDMA2000, GSM, HSPA+ and LTE have been completed. However, this year is the year that finally it is offered to the device manufacturers modem chipsets (of the likes of Qualcomm) that have full for HD voice. HD voice on CDMA2000 requires upgrading the 1X carrier to 1X Advanced. This new network infrastructure upgrade increases the capacity and range of a given cell by up to 70%, but the most important thing is to extend the 1X channel to about 300Kbps, giving more than enough space to support a new, superior audio code. The EVRC-NW (Enhanced Variable Rate Code à Narrow Band / Band) codec for CDMA2000 systems is a redesigned codec that can scale from the narrowband channel sizes currently supported in CDMA2000 to the new broadband channel sizes provided in CDMA2000 1X Advanced. In addition, a multi-phone noise cancellation system is required to take full advantage of the codec. The new codec allows proper audio encoding in the 50Hz-4KHz range at a sample rate of 16KHz, instead of half that for the older narrowband codec. In addition, the broadband codec actually goes up to 7KHz instead of 4KHz, offering slightly better audio recording capabilities. On the GSM side of things (which includes 2G GSM, HSPA, + and LTE), HD voice is largely a core network upgrade. The audio channel for the base stations needs to be expanded a bit to make room for the AMR-WB (Anchada Multi-Rate Adaptiva) codec, however, AMR-WB and EVRC-NW offer largely the same benefits and have the same requirements. However, HD voice upgrade is easier on the GSM side, as no mass equipment updates are required on the base station/tower side. However, there are restrictions for currently available HD voice implementations. It seems that the CDMA2000 and GSM variants of HD voice are not interoperable for the foreseeable future, so GSM calls CDMA phones and vice versa will fall to narrowband codecs that support current interoperability systems. For the CDMA2000, all participants in a call must be connected to a cellular site that supports CDMA2000 1X Advanced and each phone connected to 1X Advanced cells must have a chipset that supports 1X Advanced and theCODEC (otherwise, it reverts to 1x and the oldest codec). For GSM networks, all phones involved in the call must support the AMR-WB CODEC. In LTE, HD voice is incorrect in the Volte standard, because Volte uses AMR-WB. As long as the device is compatible with AMR-WB, then HD VOICE is possible. The only thing left would be for the network operator to enable HD voice on the network. For cabling networks (standard telephony), HD voice is not yet available. All currently available Wireline telephony services (including VoIP-based ones such as Vonage) use narrowband voice decks, so there is no capacity for HD voice. While SIP supports it (and is the basis for VOLTE HD voice support), most WIPLINAL networks connect to bandwidth at 12 kbps to prevent too much data being passed through. As a result, higher quality speech codecs cannot be used. Currently, there are no networks in the United States that offer HD voice. The T-Mobile network The USA UU. It is technically capable of it, since the new WiFi calling feature uses the same technology as Volte. However, it is currently not enabled; it will be enabled when T-Mobile deploys LTE. Sprint has stated that it will allow it to advance the upgrade to CDMA2000 1x, but it is likely to be largely useless until the end of 2013. He will also support the HD voice through Volte next year. No other CDMA Carriers will offer HD Voice via CDMA2000 1x Advanced. Verizon Wireless and AT & T will have support for the technology with the implementation of Volte, but only Verizon Wireless has announced plans to offer support for HD Voice On LTE. SPRINT can trump the feature Anything you want, but HD Voice will still be a useless feature that almost no one will ever get to, experience until the end of 2013 as soon as possible. And even then, almost all subscribers will experience HD Voice via LTE. CDMA2000 1x Advanced. If you want to experience HD voice, try using a computer-based VoIP solution for now. now.
