A collection of unit, integration and e2e tests, including "shared" tests that can be run on emulator/device or Robolectric. If you want to change to a different sample: Note: To review a different sample, replace usecases with the name of sample you want to check out. Variations This project hosts each sample app in separate repository branches. You signed in with another tab or window. usecases[compare] Adds a new domain layer that uses UseCases for business logic. Clone the repository: git clone git@github.com:googlesamples/android-architecture.git This step checks out the master branch. A real production app with network access, user authentication, etc. What is it not? A UI/Material Design sample, and uses Room as source of truth, with a reactive UI. See the NOTICE file distributed with this work for additional information regarding copyright ownership. Android Architecture Blueprints is a project to showcase different architectural approaches to developing Android apps. In this branch you'll find: Kotlin Coroutines for background operations. Stable samples - Kotlin Sample Description master The base for the rest of the branches. Check out Plaid instead. A presentation layer that contains a fragment (View) and a ViewModel per screen (or feature). In its different branches you'll find the same app (a TODO app) implemented with small differences. dagger-android[compare] A simple Dagger setup that uses dagger-android and removes the two flavors. The app in this project aims to be simple enough that you can understand it quickly, but complex enough to showcase difficult design decisions and testing scenarios. In addition, each page in the developer's guide includes code snippets. The Google Samples repository on GitHub includes sample apps that demonstrate the use of the Places SDK for Android. Java is a registered trademark of Oracle and/or its affiliates. For example, see the guides for place details, autocomplete, and get current place. The interface of the app is deliberately kept simple to focus on architecture. Two product flavors, mock and prod, to ease development and testing (except in the Dagger branch).
